NAME:

Workshop 2, Week 7

On Morality, Character, and Relationships

Bishop Robert Barron

1. How does the gnostic view that there's a sharp divide between soul and body shed light on the modern idea that you may do bad things but you're actually a good person deep down?

2. Does a person's actions exclusively determine how virtuous they are? Is it possible to act badly but interiorly be a good person?

3. Bishop Barron, quoting John Paul II, said there are two results from every action, what are the two results that follow from participation in the modern "hook up culture"?

4. How can we help our students understand their actions have moral weight and that every time they do a moral act, for good or for ill, they are shaping the person they are becoming? Write down one way can introduce this idea to your students this week in a memorable manner.
